Having been engaged in endeavors at every level of Higher Education since the early aughts, Paul Bowers has held faculty, researcher, assessment and learning specialist roles at institutions both domestically and abroad. In the Jefferson College of Nursing, Bowers is leading a team of learning designers and academic technologists, collaborating with our seasoned faculty on a mission to create effective learning experiences and environments for our students.

Joining JCN in 2019 as the Director of Academic Technology and Design, Bowers established processes and affordances to facilitate the delivery of nursing courses across seated, hybrid and online modalities. With the addition of other talented learning designers and technologists in 2020, Paul now leads a team providing faculty with both pedagogical and technological supports.

Bowers also consults with JCN decisionmakers to select the most appropriate teaching practices and learning technologies, lending just-in-time guidance as the need arises. At the institution level, Paul regularly partners and liaises with Academic Commons and IS&T to ensure JCN is leveraging all arms of assistance and maintaining practices consistent with TJU.
